Title: Small but Deadly

The littering of strings on the ground may seem harmless however once an innocent bird's feet or toes get caught by the strings as they cannot see the string demonstrated by the blur around the string and the near invisible strand of hair on the ground, they lose either their feet or toes as they get caught in it. This is a serious impact on the bird, highlighted by the red colour of the strings as the birds become less efficient to land and fight for food. Thus increasing their chances of death. This issue can be resolved by spreading awareness of being more mindful of the littering of thin strands of strings and hair by placing the string and hair into the bin with a secure lid.
